DICK'S SISTER

LENGTH, 1000 FEET.

COPYRIGHT 1908

Two fellow clerks, "Dick" and "Fred", employed by a Banker.

Dick knowing of "Fred's" fast ways disapproves of his visits to his sister. The girl also discourages him. The Banker gives "Dick" a large sum of money to take care of until next morning. Unconscious of any dishonesty present he places the precious envelope in his desk and leaves. This has all been observed by "Fred" who secures the cash. The next morning the employer asks for the money. To "Dick's" consternation it is gone.

In a torrent of rage the Banker discharges "Dick" and installs "Fred" as his successor. Arriving home, "Dick's" sister acting on a presentiment, promises to work in his behalf. The first step is to write a note pretending remorse for her apparent coolness. The plan works well, "Fred" swallows the hook, line, batt and all. He escorts her out for a walk, but contrary to her expectations he surpasses the villain she thought him capable of and attempts to assault her. In the struggle she perceives the missing package in his pocket. She defends herself with a hatpin and escapes. During a spell of debauchery a vision comes to "Fred" and he vows to lead a better life. He takes his place as a farm hand and one year works his reformation. Singular enough "Dick's" sister, mother and himself visit there and the farmer's recommendation causes a happy reunion.

MANUFACTURER OF

Life Motion Picture Machines, Films, Slides and Stereopticons

Lubin Building, 926-928 Market St., Phila., Pa.

No. 80.